and, to which I replied in a post-note. I confess that that misrepresentation excited my my deep indignation. I wonder at his reckless audacity of accusation. He seems to me unscrupulous. At any rate there is not a particle of truth in what he says. I hear that he has been at your house since the meeting, but I am sure you cannot feel toward him as you once did. In my opinion, he has disgraced himself in consentingly to lend his name as a bulwark behind which P.P. and the t's are now waging a deadly war upon you. His eulogies of you in view of your former labors seem intended as a mask for present hostility.

I have half regretted that I did not put this point more sharply in my valedictory, stating distinctly what is true, viz: that Phillips has at last taken his place as the leader of the anti-Garison faction in our ranks. He dares not openly quarrel with you, but thinks he can afford to attack me. He is a powerful man, with a numerous train of advisors at his back, ready to echo any word of his, however unjust; while I am ~~a~~ ^{comparatively} an obscure and unimportant person; but "there is he armed who hath his quarrel just," and surely I know that justice is on my side in this controversy. He does not meet me in a fair discussion of the points, but is base enough to hurl his accusations at my head, relying upon his great influence to give them effect.

My future is yet undecided. I have several projects under consideration, but am in no hurry to decide. There is work for me somewhere no doubt, and in due time Providence will indicate the field in which it may be found. Meanwhile I am enjoying a freedom such as I have not known before for many years.

I hope and pray that nothing will occur to prevent you from coming to the Progressive meeting with Mr. Thompson.

We shall need you very much this year, and Mr. Thompson, with you at his side, will be more at home and therefore more serviceable in our meetings. I suppose you are preparing your oration on Lincoln, to be delivered next week in Providence. I have half a mind to go on and hear it. Why not repeat it at our meeting the week after its delivery in Providence? I want Mr. Thompson to give us at Longwood his history of the Anti-Slavery movement, delivered in part at the Subscription-Festival last winter.

Don't promise to go anywhere else but with me and Mr. Thompson to lodge at Longwood. I want you in the early stages of the meeting where I can consult you conveniently. Afterwards there will be opportunity for you to accept the hospitality of Hamm, Cox & others.
